News from the Burton Art Gallery and Museum

Having the Gallery open over Christmas was a boon to local families with visiting relatives, and also the coffee-time meetings for Gallery regulars. The Cafe du Parc is to be congratulated on the warmth of its greeting, the variety of food prepared with limited kitchen staff, and the good atmosphere of bonhomie and comfort on cold Winter days. We hope this is an omen for the future.

When the Gallery re-opens on 2nd February, you will be delighted to find, in gallery 2, a selection of watercolours by Judith Ackland and Mary-Stella Edwards, who lived and worked for many years in the Cabin at Bucks Mills. The National Trust has taken over responsibility for this unique cottage, and there are occasions when it is open to the public; one can experience a time-warp, where everything the two artists used, both for their art and in their domestic duties, is there, just as they left it. Naturally, they painted the area in which they lived: they loved the cliffs and rocks, the beach and its marine creatures, lacy seaweed and rock pools. They enjoyed living in the village, with its crooked rooftops and smoky chimneys, the woodland around it, and the sea itself, seen from the windows of their cottage when they awoke each day. The Burton is privileged to have such a large collection of their work, and has recently acquired some new additions. The Museum holds a collection of Judith's 'dioramas' – figures inspired by famous paintings by Renoir and Fragonard, for example, as well as the tools of their artistic trade. This collection is on show until 9th March.

Torridge Schools Exhibition

Mums and Dads, Grannies and Grandads! Are you ready for a treat? Then come along to the Burton on 13th February, and you will walk into an Aladdin's Cave of children's art! This is the time of the long-awaited, comprising artwork by pupils from most of our local schools. Gallery I will be filled from ceiling to floor with dazzling colour. You will be delighted to see such a variety of talent in the form of paintings, ceramics, models, sculpture, textiles, created by children and teenagers, from 4 to 18 years. The exhibition continues until 15th March. Plenty of time to visit many times, just for the fun of it.

The Art of Paper Cutting

Mix up a Saturday, 7 people, a pile of cutting boards, blades and a stack of black paper and you get the most inspired day doing something totally different.

I recently attended a "Paper-Cutting" course at the Burton with the artist Caroline Rees who has evolved her career as a sandblasted glass artist into a paper cut artist over the last few years.

So after the basic introductions - Caroline had travelled from Swansea to Bideford to run the course for us - we set to work practising cutting out simple squares on a piece of black paper on the chopping mat, using the blade. In no time, most of the class were ready to move onto working on an image. For some, this was hand drawing an outline and being smart enough to work out how to simplify the image and block it out ready for cutting. For the rest of us we found an appealing stencil in Caroline's collection, outlined the image on black paper and then, almost in a therapeutic trance, cut around the multitude of lines to reveal a stunning image.

If you fancy having a go at paper cutting, and you missed this course, there is a small selection of paper cutting books on sale at the Burton Art Gallery shop. But if paper cutting isn't for you, then Caroline's limited edition paper cuts are also on sale at the Burton.

Book News

'A Short History of Tractors in Ukrainian' by Marina Lewycka. Discussed by Bideford Library Readers' Group.

It is, as the title suggests, a history of tractors. The person writing this history is the 84 year old father around whom other story lines emerge, particularly after he remarries two years after becoming a widower – to a glamorous, thirty six year old blonde named Valentina! She turned out to be a gold digging mercenary who increasingly manipulate/bullies her elderly husband. Within a short period of time she has managed to completely disrupt the family's life and secrets that have long lain dormant are awakened, secrets that they'd rather have left buried.

When the book was first published the Daily Telegraph described it as 'Delightful, funny, touching,' and this was reiterated by many other reviewers. However, although several in the group found it humorous initially it became increasingly dark as the tale progressed: some liked the contrast this provided. Overall, however, it was felt that the story line was depressing rather than funny.

As hinted at above, the book could be read at different levels although we were left unclear as to whether this should be regarded as a serious book with a touch of lightness or a light book with some more serious elements. Perhaps it's this raising of questions that makes for either a good book or for, at least, a good discussion.

Peter Evans.

The Readers' group meets on the first Wednesday of each month at 2 p.m. in Bideford Library. Books for the month are supplied by the Library and can be picked up at the meeting or from the Library desk. Discussions are very much centred on the book of the month and meetings usually finish around 3.15. If further information is required anyone interested can contact Peter Evans on 01237 47917. Book for discussion in February is 'Scenes from provincial life' by William Cooper.

The Elder Queen- a modern fairy tale is John Kruse's third novel and the story takes place between Bude and Bideford, centred on the fictional village of Darracombe.

The story follows the experiences of Darren Carter, whose family life is turned upside down when he meets a fairy woman at a local ancient monument. Marriage breakdown, eviction, loss of money and possessions follow, before redemption comes through saving the local area from test drilling for shale gas (with the help of the fairies). It is published on Amazon Kindle priced at £3.00.

Northern Devon Sustainable Energy Fair

The highly successful fair will be returning to Bideford in June after a year away. The event held at Bideford's Pannier market in June 2013 saw hundreds of visitors come to Bideford in search of solutions to insulating and protecting their household from the rising energy bills.

This year the organisers are looking for more people to get involved and be part of the organising committee that will help develop and shape the event to attract more shoppers into the town. "The event isn't just about ways to save money and reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, it is also about developing a more resilient and thriving community." says James Craigie, the events founder and lead organiser. "We have many small businesses and shops in Bideford, many of them stocking products from the local area that are much better for the environment than those with huge transport miles, or carbon miles."

Strengthening the local economy also comes from helping people save money on their energy bills and replacing expensive foreign fossil fuels with cheaper home produced fuels like woodchips and logs. The Renewable Heat Incentive is the way government is rewarding householders for making the transition to sustainable fuels like wood to heat their homes rather than oil and gas. These financial incentives lasting over 20 years can make it very financially rewarding to replace, especially old oil fired central heating systems, with up-to-date wood pellet systems.

"Solar panels were definitely what everyone was after at the last Fair" James explains. "They have grown in popularity and although the subsidy has fallen as government makes cut backs, they are improving in efficiency and cheaper these days still making them very worthwhile." The range of products and services is going to be much bigger and better this year round and all this take extra time and work to organise. Ranging from simple ways to cut costs through LED lighting, radiator reflectors and draught proofing, will be on show with small wind-turbines, heat pumps and much more.

As there was in 2013 there will be a range of talks on how to reduce energy use through changing behaviour, on what are the challenges facing us in peak oil and many more things. The highlight of the last Fair was the talk by Peter Crone on the prospect for off-shore wind energy in our area, something that could still be developed and create thousands of jobs locally.

The Northern Devon Sustainable Energy Fair is entirely organised by volunteers and promoted by funds donated by local climate activist and supporters. To get involved or to find out ways that you can help please contact me on NDSustainableEnergy@gmail.com or call 01237 477 852.

Bideford Sustainability Group Creating a climate for change

A resolution solution.

Round about this time, just hauling ourselves back into normal life after the tinselly glories of the festive season can be anticlimactic. It's the turning over of a new leaf, and you can do an awful lot with that. So while 2015 trips off the tongue quite nicely, a good omen if ever there was one, a lot of us have no doubt decided to give it the best possible start, and selected some New Year's resolutions; to make sure the clean slate stays shiny for as long as possible. It's a tradition seemingly as long as time itselfit's hard to believe the cave men weren't about after the winter equinox, vowing never to eat another woolly mammoth as long as they lived; sure it was a delightful meal, but no way was it worth the lives of 15 men and a skilled dog. Yet by the time February starts rolling around, with its longer days, the craving's back, and our Neanderthal's on the war path once more, rallied by pangs of hunger, ready to raid the mammoth tin again. And no doubt he feels awful about it too.

Even though we start off the 365 days with invariably good intentions, a lot of personal promises tend to fall by the way side and each hopeful resolution broken feels like a crushing blow in the face for 'new me.' Then one man said recently that a good way to avoid all this upset, is write down something you'd never dream of doing any way- like gorging on Brussell sprouts- and you'd find it very easy to uphold.(If somewhat of a cheat.)

Although his way is sure to bring success, it might not actually bring satisfaction; often the whole point is to prove to yourself you're capable of change, not dupe others into thinking so. Therefore if a couple of ideas have already fallen through this time- we're 744 hours into 2015 there's been a lot of time for things to go wrong; then why not try this next year; and just vow to try? That way each hobnob avoided, paper left unwasted or whatever your own goal might be, is a little victory, rather than more pressure not to mess it up.

From everyone here at Buzz, we hope your year will be a great one, has already gotten off to a flying start, and that your slate may be forever sparkling!

Maths success.

Finally, a massive well done to Amy Walker ,Kieran Spittles, Max Heard and James Gould of the Bideford College maths team. All students from sixth form, they competed against 13 schools from around our Region and won. They now go on to the National finals in London in February where they will take on the other Regional winners countrywide. Huge congratulations are due all four of them - and good luck for the finals in Spring!

Connections :- This is the first in a series of articles about people who have links with North Devon. We start at A for Sir Michael Ansell.

Sir Michael Ansell (1905 – 1994), legendary equestrian

Michael Ansell was born at The Curragh, Co. Kildare in Ireland in 1905, into a military family. He trained as an army officer at Sandhurst, where he showed no aptitude as a scholar, but considerable aptitude as a horseman, and spent the pre-war years travelling the world in equestrian pursuits, courtesy of the Army. At the start of the war, however, he was involved in an an incident of 'friendly fire' where he lost four fingers on one hand, and the virtual loss of his eyesight.

He then spent some time in a prisoner-of-war camp, where the highlights were painful visits to doctors in attempts to save his sight, and discussion with other horse-loving officers on how they would improve equestrian standards when they got back home. Here he developed some skill at knitting, both as a form of occupational therapy for his injured hands, and partly to bemuse and annoy his German captors. After several frustrating delays, he managed to get repatriated as an injured officer in a mutual exchange with injured German officers, via Sweden and under the auspices of the Swedish government.

This was in 1943, and he decided to retire to a quieter part of the world, Pillhead House, on what is now the Old Barnstaple Road, just outside Bideford. He lived there until his death in 1994.

Unable to remain inactive for very long, , he decided to set up a horticultural business based at Pillhead, selling snowdrops, polyanthus, wife, Eileen, after only six and later South African gerberas to Covent Garden, winning a silver medal with this at the Royal Horticultural Society show.

It was not long before his equestrian friends in London contacted him about improving the standard of equestrian competition in Great Britain, which had somewhat lapsed in the interwar years, and he found himself away from home guite frequently. His main advice, personally implemented by him, was that the course and height of fences should be brought up to international standards, so that equestrian events were run efficiently, and on a sound commercial basis, considering the audience at all times, and insisting that show-jumpers be elite few.

As an ex-military man, he turned out to be a brilliant organiser, and was responsibe for the Victory Championships at White City in1945, restarted the International Horse Show in 1947 designed the show-jumping course for the 1948 London Olympics, and instituted the Horse of the Year Show in 1949. He was the manager of the British Olympic equestrian team at the Helsinki Olympics in1952, where Britain won a gold medal. He was awarded the CBE in 1961, and knighted in 1968.

He dominated the show-jumping world for the next twenty years, becoming chairman of the BritishShow-jumping Society between 1945 and 1965, and became a national celebrity. He appeared on one of the early editions of 'This Is Your Life', somewhat reluctantly, until he and his wife discovered that at the end of the programme, they would meet their son, whom they had not seen for some time, as he was serving as a soldier in Cyprus. He was also a castaway on Desert Island Discs with Roy Plomley, and chose as his luxury item a pair of knitting needles and some wool.

Show-jumping and horticulture were not his only interests. He was an expert salmon fisherman, and could often be found on the river Torridge at Beam, near Torrington, using his unique casting method, which he had perfected with much practice on the lawn at home, depending on sound rather than sight for its effectiveness. On one occasion, he was just about to give up on the day's fishing, when he decided to try one last cast of the rod, and caught a huge 19lb salmon, with which he struggled for more than half an hour before landing it, to be followed a little later by another almost as big.

He wrote three books, including his autobiography, Soldier On (1974).

In the meantime, in 1970, his first wife Victoria, died after a long and painful illness. He married again soon afterwards, but his second months of marriage, was killed when a lorry knocked her down when she was out walking.

He was a keen supporter of St. Dunstan's, the home for blinded ex-servicemen in Brighton, where he died of pneumonia in 1994, having previously suffered from Alzheimer's.

He had elevated British equestrianism to new heights, and Britain now hosts some of the world's top equestrian events, as well as times, and insisting that show-jumpers be producing a number of medal -winning athletes of admitted from all walks of life rather than just the the highest calibre, as demonstrated at the recent London Olympics.

Perhaps one of his greatest legacies, though, was that he showed that having a handicap, being blind, need not be an obstacle to success, and can, in fact, provide an inspiration to all. Chris Trigger (c)

Training the Army Horse.

(Whilst turning out old cassette tapes recently, I came across a recording in Devonshire dialect, made by my father, Percy Reed (1907 – 2001) of Northam, in 1985. It told the tale of a childhood incident in which he was involved when his father was training a WW1 army horse. I have since produced a 4-minute YouTube video which includes his recording, together with the script, for anyone who is interested! I have printed the script below.)

I'd like to take ee back a vew years jist arter the first world war and tell ee bout Varmer Tom and the army horse. Now Tom was a master hand wi horses, what ee didn knaw bout em wadn worth the tellin. If anybody in the village had ort wrung wi their horse they'd come rinning to Tom and you may depain if ee couldn put en right twas a waste of time zending ver the Vet. Aye, ee knawed all bout horses sure nuff.

Wull twas like this yer. Arder the war the army had to zell off a lot of horses wot theyd vinished wi and zo they had these horse zales up to Exeter and anybody that knawed Tom would ax en to go up and buy one for em. This zeemed to work out purty well, they could trist Tom to git the right horse for em and nort plaized Tom better than to hav a day off to Exeter.

Now the one I want to tell ee about was one ee bought for eself an Ive yerd tell ee had a vine ole caper gitting en on the train up to St Davids til Tom thought about whipping off es best jacket and put en awver the horses haid and backed en in the truck.

Ive erd zay that zome of these horse traders when they wanted to zell a broken down ole horse theyd given a veed of Vuz chaff avore the zale to liven en up. Wull this one didn need ort like that, more likely ee needed something to quieten en down, zo Varmer Tom thought e'd try en out in the chaffcutter. Zo ee hitched en up and led en round a vew times to git en in the way au't. Now me en me brither (jist boy-like) stood watching this gwain on, zo Tom axed us to level the horse round whilst ee went up to the tallet to git a vew wads of straw.

I dont knaw what thatole horse hed done in the war but whativer twas it didn include gwain roun-inroun in little circles and no zooner hed Tom turned ees back he reared up and bevore us knawed what hed appened the horse was flat on the ground all tangled up with the tackle. Zo Varmer told us two boys to kneel on es neck while ee tried to git en free.

Wull us was only a couple of tackers and ver all the good us done us mayht jist as well ev told us to kneel on a vuz bush. The ole horse wadn gwain to let a couple of whipper snappers like us keep en down and twadn very long avore hes haid come up vollowed by the rest awn, and us two boys landed in the ... wull I wont tell ee what us landed in but us didn smell very sweet, jist about as sweet as Varmer Tom when ee hollered "why didn ee keep ees haid down like I told ee". Howiver there wadn no damage done but I can tell ee twas the last time thicky horse went in the chaffcutter. Cynthia Snowden.

A Potted History of North Devon Pottery

I have been researching the export of Bideford Pottery since 2010. This started with a prestigious Winston Churchill Travel Fellowship to Virginia and North Carolina, and have continued with passion and enthusiasm ever since, finding sherds (small pieces of pottery) on the local beaches and estuary. For further information, or to book a talk – see my contact details below.

In 1674 a visitor remarked that Bideford was "... a place of great trade, hath many ships of good bignes...it (Barnstaple) was lately a place of very great trade.. But Bideford hath stoln it all away since the river hath grown shallow..".

Pottery made in Bideford, in the North Devon Tradition is very important and significant to the history and prosperity of the town. It dates back to Medieval times with the greatest days being in the 17th and early 18th Centuries. The industry grew as clay was available from Fremington, Peters Marland (white clay, also used for tobacco pipes) and Meeth. Pottery produced was The 17th Century saw an important relationship typcially domestic earthernware made from the distinctive red Fremington clay, glazed on the inside where contact with food was to be made. For example Baluster jars (see picture)for transporting food stuffs to British Colonists and plates, large platters, cups, pipkins (saucepans), bowls.

Other, rarer, pottery forms also include Candlesticks and Chamber pots. Some of these were finely decorated with the signature yellow glaze and designs scratched into the surface. 'Sgraffito' ware. Traditional North Devon style pottery is made when the slip from white clay is scratched away from the surface into a design, revealing the clay beneath. Subjects are usually nautical, commemorative, natural history and harvest time. Hundreds of potters kept the industry going in and around Bideford and there were also potteries at Instow and Westleigh.

Bideford's port . 17th Century Bideford was a significant town and port with the boom time for pottery being between 1630 and 1690. There were a number of places of production with up to 30 or 40 kilns at any one time billowing out black smoke. As well as domestic trade, the 'bread and butter' trade was with Wales, particularly Swansea, Carmarthen and Cardigan and in the North Western and Southern coasts of England. Exports expanded the industry and contributed greatly to Bideford's prosperity.

Trade with Ireland. Ireland was a major market for Bideford Pottery and the majority of its wares were exported there. A large amount of pottery was sent to Ireland in the 1600's, to Dublin, Galway and Limerick. Butter booms of the 17th century expanded the trade, particularly with Waterford and Ross in Southern Ireland, contributing to both North Devon's and Ireland's prosperities.

Trade with the English Colonies. The other big markets were the English Colonies in North America and the Caribbean. These shipments only made up about 15% of the overseas export but they were very important in laying the foundation for Colonial trade. In Virginia the largest deposits of North Devon Pottery outside of Jamestown have been found - pre-dating 1650. Bideford merchant Thomas Smith regularly traded with Virginia. This expanded greatly towards the end of the 17th century. North Devon settlers were on the Eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay, North Carolina, down through the Outer Banks Region in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Merchants offered passage there by ship, carrying servants from Bideford and Ireland so merchants sent ships to Virginia and developed trade.

between pottery being exported to Virginia and tobacco being shipped back to Bideford on return. This trade enabled Bideford ships to set up trade in tobacco with Northern Europe. Merchant ships were built in Maryland and the colonies up to the 19th century. These ships were then used for the trade in earthenware with the colonies. North Devon pottery has also been found in Newfoundland, connecting Bideford to the fishing trade there.

The heyday for North Devon Pottery and its exports was the 17th and early 18th Centuries the end of the 17th century saw the trade with Northern colonies drop and then collapse. Despite a brief respite, overseas markets were lost and eventually plastic, enamel and glass replaced earthenware. The last traditional Bideford Pottery closed in 1916.

Evidence of the economic benefit of the Pottery and tobacco trades, coupled with the Charter of Incorporation granted in 1573, can be seen today in the architecture and infrastructure of Bideford -John Davie's Colonial House (now The Royal Hotel) and the houses in Bridgeland St (1692), certainly show testament to the amount of wealth created in the development of the Port and town. February 1915 One Hundred Years ago.

2nd February 1915 The Union of London and Smiths Bank, who have an agency here in Bideford, have appointed girl clerks in one of their offices for the first time. This is seen as a radical step, as banking has always been seen a male prerogative

On 9th February 1915 Messrs Stewart & Co who have a shop at 52 Mill Street were holding a 1/-(one shilling) sale. On offer amongst other things, were:

2 Large Brown Towels

2 Large White Towels

Large Rush Mats 2¹/₂ feet x 5 feet.

4 yards of Check pattern Glass cloth.

Lots of complete sets of Ladies and gents underwear and many more items all at 1/-Farleigh's Stores, High Street, are advertising Pancake Flour, which – they say – makes delicious pancakes without the need for eggs or sugar.

At the annual meeting of the Bideford and District Tradesman's Association, Mr H Brain reviewed the progress of his earlier proposal that all business should close for lunch between 1pm and 2pm except on Tuesdays. He reported that the majority of local business owners are now in favour. Bideford section of the Volunteer Training Corps held a training route march from Bideford to Westward Ho! and back. Played out of Bideford by the Wesleyan Brass Band and accompanied throughout by The Bugle Band. It rained all day but the men were in good spirits and consider it their duty to train this way. All men who cannot join the Regular or Territorial Armies are asked to volunteer and should contact Mr W E Jenkinson at the Town Hall.

On the 16th February Bideford Town Council Refugee committee have acquired the lower room in the School rooms at Silver Street. These rooms were recently used at the Scout HQ. There are over 200 refugees from Belgium in and around the town and this will be a social club for them. A week later the Gazette reports that the club is now open and 126 refugees attend the opening. The Government are advertising for Shoeing Smiths to look after the horses being used in this country and abroad in the war effort. Pay will be 5/- per day and those who are qualified and under the age of 45 can apply at the local recruiting office. Service could be in England or overseas.
